Digital Television Station WNYA(TV), Pittsfield, Massachusetts (the “Station”), is currently scheduled to change its over-the-air channel no later than the tenth transition phase, which ends as of July 2020. In October 2019, the Commission approved the Station’s modification application that greatly simplified the channel repacking process, though the Station is continuing to coordinate its installation of a new antenna and other equipment with its linked station – WXXA-TV – which also uses the same tower site.

Although the Station continues to work to try to complete its transition by July 3, 2020, the Station also recently filed a construction permit extension request in an abundance of caution. If the Station is unable to complete its permitted facilities by July 3, the Station is prepared to change to its post-transition channel as of July 3 through use of an existing (auxiliary) antenna on its permitted tower site, subject to a not-yet submitted (and, hopefully, not needed) request for special temporary authority.
