

Response to Transferor Legal Certifications Question

This question is answered “no” because there are no agreements as contemplated by the question on the form. This transaction is an involuntary transfer of control of the parent corporation due to the death of the single majority stockholder.

However, as the transaction is involuntary, the transferor’s personal representative certifies that court orders or other authorizing documents have been issued and that the transferor’s personal representative has caused the documents to be placed in the licensee’s public inspection file(s) and submitted to the Commission (herein) copies of such court order(s) or other authorizing documents.