

Response to Transferor Legal Certifications Question

This question is answered “no” because there are no agreements as contemplated by the question on the form. This transaction is an involuntary transfer of control of the parent corporation due to the death of the single majority stockholder.

However, as the transaction is involuntary, the transferee’s personal representative certifies that court orders or other authorizing documents have been issued and that the transferor has placed in the licensee’s public inspection file(s) and submitted to the Commission (herein) copies of such court order(s) or other authorizing documents.
