

EXHIBIT

By this exhibit, the licensee responds to a question raised by the FCC staff in processing the applications requesting FCC consent to the pro forma transfer of control of Cox Enterprises, Inc. (“CEI”), the ultimate parent company of the licensee. The FCC staff asked whether Richard L. Braunstein, one of the trustees of the Dayton Cox Trust-A, has the power to vote the stock of the trust without the participation of Barbara Cox Anthony and Anne Cox Chambers, the two other trustees. Under Ohio law, which governs the trust, Richard L. Braunstein does not have the individual power to vote the stock; the trustees are required to act in concert and vote on all matters together. All trustees have a fiduciary obligation under Ohio law and the terms of this trust to act in the best interests of the trust. Therefore, Richard L. Braunstein does not have the power to vote the stock of Dayton Cox Trust-A.
