Fowler easily qualifies as a community for FCC allotment purposes. Fowler is an incorporated village located in Clinton County, Michigan.

Originally called "Dallas", Fowler was created when John Parks settled the area and became its first postmaster in 1849. In 1856, the chief engineer of the Detroit & Milwaukee Railroad, Robert Higham, purchased 160 acres to build the line, but the land was too swampy and the project failed. The location of the town was moved to a large tract of land owned by J. N. Fowler, who allowed the move. In 1869, the name was changed to Fowler at the request of the towns people. The town eventually was incorporated as a village in Clinton County during the lumber boom in 1885. Today, Fowler remains a small rural community, serving the needs of the local farming community.
