Black districts decide to merge despite desegregation clause

By CRISTINA RODRIGUEZ Associated Press Writer

Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK_The Earle School Board voted unanimously Tuesday to annex another predominantly black district, despite concerns that state education officials will find the merger disrupts desegregation efforts.

The Earle vote gave tentative approval to a 1,030-student district that would be 97 percent black. Neighboring Marion has a 3,500-student district that is 70 percent white. Crawfordsville is halfway between the towns.

Before the agreement is complete, the state attorney general's office must decide whether the merger would hamper or delay desegregation in another school district. If Attorney General Mike Beebe disapproves of the annexation, it would force Crawfordsville into another district _ probably Marion.

Rep. Linda Chesterfield, D-Little Rock, who helped write the law that ordered 57 small school districts to consolidate or annex into other districts, said the bill's desegregation clause was not meant to prevent mostly black or mostly white schools from merging.

She said unless Marion's school board formally asks to consolidate with Crawfordsville, the state shouldn't interfere.

"I think the willingness to (merge) is a primary factor," Chesterfield said. "If there becomes a row between them, the attorney general will decide."

Crawfordsville's booming economy _ including a railway facility that is expected to attract other businesses _ could be a factor if districts decide to fight over it. Earle, but not Marion, has been trying to annex Crawfordsville for five years.

Beebe spokesman Matt DeCamp said the office will review all applications to ensure they comply with all state and federal desegregation laws. None of the Crittenden County districts involved are under specific desegregation orders.

School districts with fewer than 350 students have until April 1 to submit voluntary agreements to join other districts. The state Board of Education has until June 1 to approve the proposals, and all plans must be in place before the next fiscal year begins July 1.

That timeline has both Crawfordsville and Marion superintendents worried. If the state rejects the Earle-Crawfordsville agreement and orders Crawfordsville to merge with Marion, district officials will only have a few weeks to smooth out the merger.

"All the curriculum alignment, the preparation of facilities, the transportation networks that have to be designed, the schedule of senior high students into classes ... there's so much work that has to be done," Marion Superintendent Dan Shepherd said.

Crawfordsville officials conducted a number of surveys and public meetings before casting their lot with Earle.

Half of Crawfordsville teachers and students in grades 7-12 would have favored joining Marion, according to a survey, Crawfordsville Superintendent Ray Nassar said.

Marion, with more students, also has more extracurricular activities and advanced placement courses.

But Crawfordsville School Board President Lawrence Lanos said many students and parents would feel more comfortable joining Earle. Many students have relatives in Earle and know many Earle students from athletic competitions, he said.

"Just dealing with parents and students, they talk like the transition going to Earle would be better to them," Lanos said.

Lanos said race is definitely a factor, but not the sole issue.

The Crawfordsville School Board voted 4-3 along racial lines March 2 to merge with Earle.

"I hope that the state department will allow us to do what we agreed to," Lanos said. "I guess for me it has nothing to do with segregation, but it's more about the students."

CRAWFORDSVILLE IS READY TO WORK HARDER

The Commercial Appeal

Fresh Eyes is a look at Greater Memphis Zip by Zip. The team that visited 72327 in Crittenden County: designer Andrew Smith, deputy DeSoto Appeal editor Ron Maxey and Wendy Kusler, executive assistant to the circulation manager.

Look real hard and use a little imagination, and you can almost see the hazy skyline of downtown Memphis from Crawfordsville, Ark.

But not quite.

That's how it is for this tiny burg in the East Arkansas Delta - so close and yet so far away.

Crawfordsville and its surrounding area, population 1,782, make up the 72327 Zip Code. The area is northwest of West Memphis in Crittenden County.

Although little more than a stone's throw from downtown Memphis, it's a different world in terms of the pace of life and some of the problems residents face.

To get a feel for just what those problems - and points of pride -are, pull up a chair and order a plate of spaghetti at Uncle John's Fine Italian Cuisine on Main Street. So much a part of the community is Uncle John's that you'll find, upon close inspection, the faces of many of Crawfordsville's residents in the mural of an Italian street scene painted on one of the restaurant's walls.

One of those faces belongs to Gordon Petty, manager of Ritter Oil Company in Crawfordsville. Petty, 60, takes pride in his community but is also honest about its challenges.

"This area of Arkansas, up and down the Delta, has deteriorated fairly quickly," says Petty, who knows money doesn't sprout from the flat, rich Delta soil as readily as it might have in years past.

"The economics are difficult right now because it's ag-related, and agriculture is in a pretty bad slump right now."

Petty knows such a scenario doesn't bode well for the future, when a new generation will be hard-pressed to find reasons to stay.

"The opportunity for young people to stay here and find good employment is gone," he says.

But don't draw the wrong conclusion from the honest assessments of residents such as Petty. While they know there are problems, their candor isn't a signal that they're ready to give up on a place they still consider a good place to call home. It just means they have to work a little harder.

That's where Jimmy Sharp enters the picture.

Sharp was elected Crawfordsville's mayor last November after serving eight years on the city council. And, like Petty, Sharp is honest in admitting that there have been losses.

"The town has gone down over the years as the businesses have closed," Sharp says from his office in the town's water department building -next door to Uncle John's. "The Krogers and the Wal-Marts put out of business years ago most of what we had here."

Sharp says he thought that by becoming mayor, he could "more or less help clean this town up."

Sharp and Petty both feel the media could help by offering more positive stories about East Arkansas, if not Crawfordsville in particular. As suburban growth has fanned out around Memphis primarily into areas other than westward across the river, they say their part of the world has largely fallen through the cracks.

Still, there are encouraging signs. For example, nearby Marion, Crittenden's county seat, has become somewhat of a growing suburban community supported by good schools. Media coverage spotlighting Marion's good fortune has been positive news that area residents can hang their hats on, local residents say.

And as long as there's such hope to build on, it's likely you'll be able to get a plate of spaghetti and a dose of conversation at Uncle John's for a long time to come.

Jimmy Sharp served on the Crawfordsville City Council for eight years before he was elected mayor last November. He's candid about the town's problems, but he's ready to do his part to help restore its luster.

Article Text:

Most of the 600 inhabitants of this tiny community will never make it to Italy, but several have made it to ``the wall," which is as close as you can get in these parts.

The wall is a large painting of an Italian street scene in which the people are mostly Crawfordsville folks. The painting even includes the town dog, Casey, who's so deaf he can't hear himself bark.

About 35 inhabitants of Crawfordsville and the surrounding area have found their way into the painting and more are on the way.

``Every now and then, somebody new comes up and says they want to be on the wall," says artist JoAnn Bloodworth, who began the painting last March and still considers it a work in progress. ``I keep adding people so I'm not sure how many there will be before I'm done."

Originally, the wall, which is in Uncle John's Restaurant on the town's blocklong Main street, was supposed to have been only a dab of Italy in John Marconi's Italian beanery. Marconi's ancestors came from Southern Italy and he wanted a mural that would pay tribute to that heritage as well as set the mood

Bloodworth, 58, an amateur artist who has lived in Crawfordsville all her life, was appointed to paint the scene on the 12-by-30-foot brick wall of Uncle John's auxiliary dining room.

When she decided to put Marconi's features on one of the figures, the painting began to take on a homegrown life of its own.

As you stand in front of the mural, you look down the street of a classic Italian village, with a range of mountains in the background and a sidewalk cafe in the foreground.

The sign on the cafe reads "Zio Giovanni's," which is Italian for Uncle John's. If you look closely at the people seated at the tables you'll see that these are not Italian faces -- they're pure Arkansas.

There's Frances Briggs, the librarian; Danny Bolden of the gas company; John Cagle, a farmer; LaDonna Hensley, a waitress; and Jane Griffin, who worked in the post office for 27 years. There's also Lucille Marconi, John's wife, and one of their sons, who is now a Catholic priest in Little Rock.

There's even Casey, the deaf white dog, sitting on the bench in the foreground, just as he sits outside Uncle John's in Crawfordsville. And that's just a few of the locals who have given life to the mural.

Although she photographs her subjects and paints from snapshots, Bloodworth admits it's not easy to get the faces right on the wall. "The faces are very small and since this is a brick wall, it is often rough and lumpy."

Nor is that the only problem. Since everyone knows the people in the painting, Bloodworth cannot make them too fat or too thin, too old or too young, too pretty or too plain -- or their friends will notice. "I had to put weight on one man because everyone felt I'd made him too skinny," said Bloodworth, who has become so involved in her first mural she even painted stepping stones in the floor leading up to the wall.

Although the Italian scene attracts a lot of lookers, the serious day-to-day eating is done in the main dining room where unpainted board walls are decorated with antique farm tools, mounted deer racks, and stuffed ducks, geese and fish.

"When I was growing up, this building was the picture show," said Mrs. Marconi. "I don't remember the name of it, but we called it 'The Buzzard.'" When the theater closed, it became a laundromat and much later a restaurant operated by Marconi's sister.

A longtime rice farmer, Marconi took over the restaurant seven years ago after drought and crop failure brought hard times to farm families.

"John had always cooked and he said, 'Let's give it a try,'" recalls Mrs. Marconi, who frankly wondered who would come to Crawfordsville to eat Italian. After all, in this sleepy little Arkansas town, where it's safe to go out at night, Main Street hasn't boomed since farmers stopped coming in by horse and wagon.

As it turned out, however, people from all over the area -- especially places such as Earle and Marion -- found their way to this unlikely bit of Italy where Marconi started out with pasta, then added barbecue, steak and bread pudding.

Bread pudding? Made from an old Italian recipe? Hardly. This bread pudding came out of America's Great Depression, when folks were trying to make every slice of bread count.

``I remember my mother making bread pudding during the hard times in Crawfordsville," said Jane Griffin.

Still, there's something Italian about it.

What it is can be found in the street scene that decorates the wall of Uncle John's Restaurant. There, sitting on a bench are Briggs and Griffin. The scenery of Southern Italy is all about them and they look as happy as if they'd just eaten big dishes of Italian-American bread pudding.

Crawfordsville , Marion school districts officially merged

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark._The merger of the Crawfordsville and Marion school districts was finalized Sunday when the Arkansas Board of Education gave it final approval.

The districts were tentatively combined in May when the board voted to merge Crawfordsville's 230 students in with Marion's 3,650 students.

Crawfordsville was among the 57 small districts with fewer than 350 students ordered by the state Education Board to consolidate under legislation approved this year in response to court-mandated education reforms.

Many in Crawfordsville had wanted to merge with the Earle School District, but on May 25 the state Board of Education instead paired it with Marion for the sake of compliance with federal desegregation orders. Crawfordsville remained under a federal desegregation order from the 1970s, forcing the wait for final approval.

That approval came from U.S. District Judge. G. Thomas Eisele, who ruled on Aug. 12 that the merger was in compliance with the desegregation order from 1970. However, Eisele said a review is needed after the schools consolidate and set a hearing for later this fall.

The Marion School District is 70 percent white and if Crawfordsville had merged with its first choice, Earle, that would have resulted in a district with 97 percent black enrollment.

Marianna attorney Bill Lewellen had criticized the state Education Board's pairing of Crawfordsville and Marion. He helped file a suit on Crawfordsville's behalf to stop the consolidation, but an interim Marion and Crawfordsville school board fired him on July 1.

The two districts started classes together on Aug. 19 in anticipation that the merger would be approved. Crawfordsville students are bused into Marion to attend classes.

With the approval of the Crawfordsville and Marion consolidation, just the Harmony Grove and Sparkman merger is left to finalize. Harmony Grove School District in Ouachita County has 787 students and Sparkman School District in Dallas County has 268 students.

Arkansas Department of Education attorney Scott Smith said negotiations are underway despite a slowed communication because of the start of classes.

Harmony Grove was assigned to merge with Sparkman when the smaller district couldn't find a consolidation partner. There are desegregation issues there as well. Harmony Grove is part of a desegregation case and had agreed that it wouldn't change in a way that would affect desegregation plans for the Camden-Fairview School District.

In response, the state Education Board still is under discussions with Harmony Grove to see how a merger with Sparkman would affect the district's desegregation status.
