Describe the educational and informational objective of the program and how it meets the definition of Core Programming.	It's the year 2080 and, thanks to a brilliant scientist, the earth is finally at peace. By creating C.R.A.T.E.R. (Combative Robotic Answer to Earth's Rivals) project, robots now settle all the disputes and problems on earth by competing in a wacky sports circuit called the Lunar League. Normally, only the best of the best robots battle it out in the Lunar League, but, due to an error, two robots named Bolts and Blip, find themselves on the worst team in the league - the Thunder Bolts. And when they discover that evil forces are at work, threatening the earth's precious peace, it's up to the Thunder Bolts to save the day! This program instills in children a sense of responsibility for finding solutions to problems bigger than their own. With their rag-tag band of teammates, it also teaches them the value of working as a team to accomplish things they could not do alone.

Describe the educational and informational objective of the program and how it meets the definition of Core Programming.	Based on the award winning book written and illustrated by Hee-na Baek. The children and parents who have experienced this delightfully imaginative book are sure to enjoy the TV series designed to be faithful to the unique art work and adventures of book. Each story begins with an introduction by Hongbi, an imaginative and lovable seven year old girl kitten, who serves as narrator. Her keen observation and fertile imagination record the adventures she has with her 5 year old brother, Hongshi, as they fly through the sky fueled by their mother's Cloud Bread! The children's stories are located where the children live, play and learn, at their home, their village and their school. Each cluster of three stories per half hour ranges from simple stories about everyday life to the dream fantasies of children and involve learning about life, responsibility and schoolbook lessons. The Cloud Bread series is designed to appeal to the imagination and wonder of children and the child within their parents.
