Describe the educational and informational objective of the program and how it meets the definition of Core Programming.	On each episode, Schwartz asks people questions from three different categories. Unlike on a traditional game show, participants of On the Spot do not win prizes or have their answers tallied. The show's format is most similar to The Tonight Show's, "Jaywalking" segment and the show Street Smarts. After each question is asked to five or six participants, the correct answer is revealed and explained. The show is produced to be both informational and entertaining.
